

OC Style File Jason White

By MEDIHA DIMARTINO

White's office fashion hack? Jersey suits. No, seriously. The Armani Exchange, his favorite designer, makes them with ponte, a double-knit fabric that's slightly thinner than your college sweatshirt and somehow retains its shape.

The chief administrative officer and general counsel at Toshiba America Business Solutions Inc. in Irvine, stops by the brand's New York store once or twice a year to stock up on the slim-fitting styles.

The suits—which also have functioning pockets—allow him to “feel fashionable” but also “maintain a minimum level of professionalism” around the office, as “in-house lawyers have a tendency to reflect their client.”

White has noticed that “colorful socks are now big” but hasn't “made that transition. I'm observing people that do it, and I go, ‘Oh, that looks good.’ I can never do it.”

His court attire, meanwhile, consists of “four staples: the solid blue, solid gray, pinstripe blue and pinstripe gray” suits he gets from Men's Warehouse.

“Your judges are generally older, much more conservative in their fashion, and you don't want to be standing out.”
